About Conference

The 9th International Conference on Hydroinformatics 2010 is a cross-disciplinary field of study that combines technological, human sociological and more general environmental interests, including an ethical perspective. It covers the application of information technology in the widest sense to problems of the aquatic environment and of the water resources management.

Its aim is to equip professionals, practitioners, engineers, managers and decision makers working in water related arenas, with available information and technology, to make rapid and robust decisions as they address the increasing challenges of ensuring a sustainable water environment and adequate water resources for generations to come.

Hydroinformatics Conference is a significant event in the continuous effort of three international associations - International Association of Hydraulic Engineering and Research (IAHR), International Association of Hydrological Sciences (IAHS) and International Water Association (IWA) - to actively promote and accelerate both research and applications of hydroinformatics in the world.

This conference, in Tianjin, China will serve as a perfect venue for practitioners, engineers, researchers, scientists, managers and decision makers from all over the world to exchange about the most advanced developments in the hydroinformatics field and the urgent water related issues. The scientific program topics includes but are not limited to:

1. Advances in Numerical and physical Modeling
2. Soft computation and knowledge engineering
3. 3S technology and digital river basin
4. Early warning system and disaster mitigation
5. Real time control and decision support system
6. Education and e-learning

Submission Procedure

Authors are invited to submit an abstract of 300-400 words in one or more of the areas identified above. Only selected abstracts are to submit full papers that are compliant for the proceedings. Detailed instructions on making the abstracts compliant can be found on the conference web site at www.hic2010.org.
